

National Workshop Citing and Referencing What? Where? How?

This workshop is designed to help researchers to perform literature search and reference management in a scientific and structured manner. It is well known that in academic writing it is essential to have literature search, cite and reference the sources used in the article, research paper, review, technical report, thesis and so forth. Researchers, faculty and professionals are often wasting hours during these activities. Further, managing references manually and revising citation and management of a declined manuscript being the most cumbersome part in art of academic writing. This workshop will provide opportunity to participants to delve into the habit of “Cite while you write” using software, such as Mendeley, EndNote and literature search using Google Scholar and PubMed.

Objectives

- To empower young researchers to know the art of literature searching, citing and referencing
- To demonstrate the citation management tools, like Mendeley and EndNote for keeping reference information in organized manner to generate automatically bibliographies in different styles
- To develop tips, tricks and topic key word for customizing Google Scholar and PubMed settings for effective literature search
